After the usual lunch of peanut-butter sandwiches, milk, and an apple, the children went down the beach to play, and I settled back my desk for a quiet afternoon's work. I had some letters to attend, and a chapter my book to finish; and I wanted time to think. Not anything particular; a writer's mind is a meadow in the sun, and thoughts cross it like a shadow a cloud, or a sway of leaves.

4. Use the words in brackets and fill in the correct verb form: present simple or present continuous, past simple or past continuous or present perfect simple or continuous. (20)

I made a living, such as it was, out of children's books. I could write two or three a year, and twice I had written a novel of my own. As long as I could keep writing, we got along; but sometimes I (lie)..... awake at night, thinking of what would happen if I (cannot)..... write. In the morning I'd be hopeful again; perhaps a book of mine would get a book-club or a prize? Perhaps. Every writer has thoughts like that, all the time.

Sitting at my desk, I (look)..... out at the fog and the grey sea, and thinking about the book I (write)....., and wishing I could get on with it. It (be)..... about a witch ... a sea-witch, who lived in a cavern underneath the ocean. The trouble was, I'd made her a bad witch, which disturbed Trisha, my young daughter, who (want)..... her to be beautiful and good. I (tell)..... her I only (know)..... bad witches, I didn't know any good ones. But the truth was, I didn't know any witches at all, and didn't believe in them, and Trisha (do).....

"They dance on the sand," she said, "when nobody (look)..... You can see the little holes they (make)..... with their magic wands. And they make little feet marks, like a bird. They dance."

"I see," I said. "Well, thank you very much." And I turned back to my typing.

Trisha continued: "Chris is bad sometimes, too, and I (feel)..... like I could smack him."

"He (is not)..... bad," I said, "he is naughty."

I (try)..... to explain the difference between bad and naughty. "When Chris is naughty," I said, "he's mad because he's smaller than you. But he (love)..... you, and if he made you cry, he'd be sorry afterwards." "No he wouldn't," said Trisha.

She thought it over for a moment, her young eyes wary and doubtful. "He only loves lizards and things," she said at last.

"He's your brother," I said. "Don't you love him?" "Yes," she said; "but he's only little. When his pants fell down, he cried."

"What (he / do)..... at the moment?" I asked.

"He (go)..... down to the beach," Trisha answered.

"Alone?" I asked. "Then we had better have a look."

We (leave)..... the house and walked down to the beach.
The sand felt warm. The sun (shine)..... and there was a light breeze engaging the spring flowers in a colorful dance along the path. But where was Chris? My eyes wandered up and down the beach. Then I spotted two little hands behind a pile of sand.

“Look daddy,” Chris said when he saw us coming, “I (build)..... a castle. And when it’s finished, I want to live in it.”
I smiled. “Wonderful.” I said and sat down.
